I saw her from across the bar.
My bar. My city. Everything in that world belonged to me.
She stood out from the crowd like she was looking for someone to blame for her pain.

That night, I felt the depths of my mistakes. I felt my scars.
With a single glance, I knew her touch would take it all away.
I craved it more than anything.

I knew she would be a tempting, beautiful mistake.
One I would make again and again... even if it cost me everything.

The regular type of help documentation is really a hard copy manual that's printed, nicely bound, and functional. It operates as a reference manual - skim the TOC or index, get the page, and stick to the directions detail by detail. The challenge using these sorts of documents is the fact that user manuals can often become jumbled and hard to understand. And in order to fix this problem, writers can try and employ things I call "go over here" ways to minimize the wordiness and simplify this content. I've found this approach to be extremely ineffective most of the time. Why? Because a single glance are considered unsuitable to get flipped through ten times for just one task. That is what online assistance is for.

If you realize your a single glance so overwhelming, you are able to go ahead and take instructions or guides in the manual individually. Select a special feature you wish to give attention to, browse the manual thoroughly, bring your product and execute what the manual is hinting to complete. Understand what the feature does, using it, and don't go jumping to a different cool feature til you have fully explored the actual one.
