But when Quinn drops by the local restaurant owned by her friend Drew Green, and stumbles upon a murder, her whole world comes crashing down.

Drew's brother was always a little surly, but Quinn can't imagine that someone disliked the prickly chef enough to kill him. The police, on the other hand, don't believe that Quinn was simply in the wrong place at the wrong time. Before her guests can even digest the next morning's gourmet breakfast, Quinn learns that she and Drew are suspects.

Drew thinks they should do some investigating of their own. Quinn is pretty sure she's better suited to playing hostess than amateur sleuth. But with Delilah as her cynical sidekick, Quinn starts looking for the real killer—before she gets put away faster than you can say "sugar."
